

From the pale chest of howling beast
Under the moon, a savage priest
With sharpened blade take its heart
And let the pack fall apart

From lands forlorn and bathed in smoke
Take the ash of an ancient oak
Where stories end and new ones start
Devastation reigns from a spark

A piece of candy bright and sweet
From those who trick, and do not treat
Within woods where children play
Far from home, content to stay

A gem of great power and pain
Dark catalyst of the arcane
Deep beneath, in the earth below
Lie secrets of science that none know

A bundle of thorns that are alive amidst dead trees its hard to thrive within woods of hatred and malice
The bramble queen rots in her palace

Under hidden canopies
Lie quiet ones above the trees
Make a strong deal and gain their word
From a child of the mockingbird

A mask for each and not for me
So that he who hides cannot see
In a city of life and light
Lies the giver of his all sight

From the hands of the white fox
Bring me a memento box
Jeweled with memories and shut tight
Lies the life between day and night