

*The court of summer, the brightest of all
There are many here who would see me fall
Through this journey, I cannot help you else I risk your safety and mine too*

*Beware the people of this land
Be cautious who you lend your hand
There are powers great and dire
Careful not to gain their ire*

Pixie Dust, golden and bright
Just a pinch and you'll take flight
Taken or given it matters not Just know that pixies cannot be bought

Three silver flowing strands of hair
Taken from head of magic mare
Where water falls in peaceful rest
Lies two families who are blessed

Gather a bushel of golden wheat
From she who is bitter but seems sweet
Get also a stalk of golden corn
But of those who harvest it, be warned

Bring a song, a satyrs tune
Sung beneath a summer moon
Dancing in woods of eternal night
The fauns always sing best by fire light

Sapling of a giant oak, tall and fair
Reaching beyond forests to open air
Surrounded by dreams and old spells
Lies a story no one will tell

A swan's feather from maiden tall
In the forests, in woodland halls
White shouldered, she changes song
From fair maiden to graceful swan

A drop of blood cursed with flame
Fighter of the green lord's game
The cursed burns hot with ancient rite
But not as hot as hunter's might

The hardest item you must acquire
A lock of hair from summer's briar
To cut the hair of the fairy queen
Will take courage and powers unseen
